GIVEN CUSTOMER FEEDBACK ON NATES NATTY

Retailers consistently said the soap itself is high-quality, with clean ingredients, good scents, and long-lasting performance. However, several stores noted that the packaging does not encourage customers to pick it up or smell it, and the box makes the scent difficult to experience before purchase. Some shops said the packaging “doesn’t present as a soap” or doesn’t distinguish itself on the shelf. Multiple reps and buyers said the name “Natty” has negative connotations and feels juvenile, while the logo does not create an emotional response. Stores that perform better with colorful or natural-looking packaging said NN’s current design feels too neutral for natural-product shoppers. Still, many stores commented positively on readability, ingredients, and the fact that the product is local.

TARGET AUDIENCE DETAILS

NN was originally created with younger, active customers and college athletes in mind, but real-world sales show the strongest interest coming from middle-aged shoppers, natural/organic product buyers, tourists, and gift-shop customers. These customers prioritize clean ingredients, natural aesthetics, clear benefits, and the ability to smell the product before purchasing. They are less drawn to youthful, bubbly branding and more responsive to simple, natural, minimalistic packaging that communicates purity and quality.
